The race was embraced by the Fi Industry, eagier to continue tapping into the sponsorship-heavy North American market. Las Vegas was Fi's third race in the U.S., more than any other country, and the most expensive spectator event on the 22-race calendar.

But it was maligned elsewhere as out of financial reach for the average American, and Verstappen ripped the race again and again and called it "99% show, and I% sporting event."

The three-time regining world champion would not let up and had another tirade after qualifying third around 1 a.m. on Saturday. He hated all the showy stuff-and just wanted FI to race. Verstappen won the title in early October and has just been extending his streak of most wins in a season since.
